Born Digital, Died Young? The Challenges of Cultural Preservation in a Digital Age

Article Submitted by MaryLei Barclay

IFLA (Released 12/8/2016) - Digital technologies have allowed for a richer, more diverse production of ideas and expressions than ever before. However, they also bring challenges as regards to the preservation of cultural heritage. As part of the Global Information Society Watch (GISWatch) report 2016, focusing on economic, social and cultural rights and the Internet, IFLA has contributed an article setting out the issues from the library perspective.

Preservation is central to the mission of libraries. For commercial publications, once a book or website reaches the end of its economic life, it can seem easier to abandon it than keep it. This is not to mention the many works which are not even produced for commercial ends. In both cases, it often needs to be a third party—often libraries—which intervenes to make sure that information is available into the future.

The importance of this work should not be underestimate. World leaders recognized the need to maintain and give access to cultural heritage in the Sustainable Development Goals, as well as in the WSIS +10 conclusions, which called for the development of practical strategies for the preservation of, and access to, recorded information in all of its forms.

There are particular challenges associated with digital heritage. First of all the sheer volume of digital material—how to decide what to preserve? IFLA was involved in the UNESCO PERSIST programme, which offers libraries and cultural heritage institutions a helping hand in setting out strategies.

Secondly, digital materials often have a number of rightholders. While it can already be difficult to identify and contact one person, obtaining agreement from a number of individuals or firms in order to undertake preservation activities can be almost impossible. IFLA is therefore calling for comprehensive exception to copyright for preservation that allows both for digitization and work with born-digital materials. It will also be vital to ensure that the creation of digital copies of works does not lead to the creation... Article

Basic American Sign Language for Library Staff eCourse—ALA January 23, continuing for 6 weeks—

American Sign Language (ASL) is an invaluable skill for library professionals. A basic grasp of ASL enhances your ability to serve deaf library users and opens up a new world of possibilities for baby storytime programs. It's also a marketable professional skill that can translate to public service jobs beyond the library world. Ideal for those without previous experience, in this eCourse, librarian and ASL interpreter Kathy MacMillan will use readings, multimedia resources, and online discussion boards to introduce basic ASL vocabulary and grammar appropriate for use in a library setting. Oak Park Library [IL] to go fine-free for residents next year—Chicago Tribune by Steve Schering (Released 11/29/2016) - The Oak Park Public Library announced it will no longer levy fines against patrons for overdue materials beginning June 1 of next year. "This recommendation aligns with our library's philosophy of service model that includes values of access and equity," Executive Director David Seleb wrote in a memo. "Fines are a regressive method of raising revenue. They impact the most those who can least afford them. They run contrary to our work to eliminate barriers to service." Article

ACRL launches Framework for information Literacy Sandbox

Article Submitted by MaryLei Barclay

ALA by Sharon Mader (Released 12/8/2016) - The Association of College and Research Libraries (ACRL) Framework Advisory Board (FAB) is excited to announce the launch of the ACRL Framework for Information Literacy Sandbox. The 'sandbox' that was first envisioned during the development of the Framework is now a reality.

The Sandbox is an openly accessible platform and repository for librarians and their educational partners to discover, share, collect and use ongoing work related to the ACRL Framework for Information Literacy for Higher Education in practice and professional development. The Sandbox is a dynamic resource whose content is created by contributors engaged in the Framework.

"ACRL's introduction of this innovative resource to support the needs of librarians engaging with the Framework in all types of academic settings is reflective of the association's strategic priorities," said ACRL President Irene M.H. Herold. "By providing opportunities for discovery and sharing of Framework-related instruction and professional development resources, the Sandbox will help build the capacity of librarians to advance the integration of information..." Musical Impressions: The Art of George Morrison and Music of Briand Morrison—January 9-21 at various locations—This multimedia performance is a visual sequence of George Morrison images accompanied by original jazz guitar compositions by his son, Briand Morrison. Young adults and adults will enjoy this amazing blend of art and music.

Morrison was surrounded by all styles of music as a child. His life changed when he heard Joe Pass, Portraits of Duke Ellington. That was when Morrison realized jazz could be played on a guitar. Morrison played through college, playing jazz in coffee houses. He now entertains crowds with his new Blues/Rock act that is reminiscent of Hendrix, Stevie Ray, Allman Bros., early Eric Clapton sound—a refined 60s/70s style with a flavorful chord or two utilizing a looper, drum machine, and some vocal.

Morrison wrote twelve compositions that accompany the 128 images of George Morrison paintings and his drawings. Some of these images have never been shown to the public. The works are from all periods, from the 1940s through his death in 2000.
